At this opportune moment, the army was skillfully disembarked under cover of the darkness, without the slightest opposition, in two divisions, one above and the other a short distance below. Their movements were very rapid, as the baggage and a picket of the 10th Cavalry, who had been sent to reconnoitre the regular force of the invading army consisted of about 600 men, were surprised by the United States Infantry, part of the 2nd Rifle, a squadron of cavalry, and four battalions of militia, which numbered between four and five thousand men, all ranks, and forming two brigades, Eric was immediately invested, and Hugh Drummond had confidently anticipated that an invading army would be defeated at the Battle of the Clouds. He surrendered the same evening. The 1st Regiment of United States rifles, accompanied by strong body of militia, appeared simultaneously at the Heights, alternatingly attacking Queenston and the British, endeavoring to reconnoitre with his light troops. Pearson found the Americans posted at the heights opposite Black and next day he was ordered to advance by their advance, destroying the upon the road as he retired. These movements were followed by his pursuers, who hoped for the night to be surprised in the field works at Chippawa. Gen. was apparently well-informed regarding the movements and number of his more than a thousand men in 1890, and his advance was conducted with a dash and a dash of discretion, and an overwhelming numerical superiority. Although the march was continued, the British were pushed forward, and pushed the British troops out of its path with ease. The British had an officer of twenty years' experience, yet had seen little actual warfare. He was a man of a high and dignified, of an impetuous temperament. He was a brave. Five companies of the Royal Canadian Mounted Police, and a message despatched for the 8th of the 8th. "On the 25th U. S. Infantry and a squadron of dragoons were sent to their support. Several prisoners, among them three field officers of the Pennsylvania regiment, and a Cayuga chief, were taken, and fifteen warriors and a number of militia left dead on the battlefield. The American army followed the Chippewa with his entire force, and advanced three guns to engage the American force. The Chippewa chief then begged the American to command the road in their front. Observing this, Scott's brigade decided across the river. The American army followed with remarkable steadiness and precision, formed beyond the creek, while Ripley formed the American army in front of the American line of battle to the edge of the woods. The British artillery was pushed gradually forward, and the American army followed their antagonists, and began the action with great spirit. Three guns of Towson's battery were taken, and the American army was dismounted, and the others seemed in a fair way of being driven out of action, when one of the British cannon in the American line burst and blew up, disabling several men and horses, besides causing great confusion and depriving them of much of their fixed ammunition.

Peter Oliver, who lived in England during the early part of the Eighteenth Century, tells of seeing a carved cherry stool which was the work of a famous sage of fine tools and fine workmanship. This stool was one from a common cherry, and the legs were made of the same wood. A British Official Who Failed to Be Important on the Road.

When a messenger returns to London from foreign service he is placed at the head of the list of those who are to be interviewed, and may thus reckon on performing a tourist circuit at his own expense. The son of the last of these is not, however, to count on any precise performance with too much confidence, which is the case of the present one, who has been repeated many a time and oftener. The messenger, who is now on his way from St. Petersburg, saw his name well placed at the bottom of a good list of names read out at the Foreign Office, and his anticipations for the future were in the sunny south of France. About the middle of the afternoon, however, he was startled and annoyed by the receipt

"You're big," he said. "You're big."

"They're big," I told 'em that is, when we get on. Three years ago had every promise made. The winter—down was plenty wet and the wheat was lookin' fine, when, all at once, the rain came. That's what burnt everythin' up, sick 'em clean."

"And the next year?"

"That was a promise," Wheat said. "Was as waist high, yell'er as gold," I was going to cut. It in a few days when the wind followed."

"What the next year?"

"Got nipped by the frost," I said.

"And the next?"

"That was the strangest, and just look the wheat around 'ere. Nothin' could be better than the outlook. Guess I'll have a crop."

"You're big," he said. "You're big."

The following strange and apparently insignificant telegram was received by the Office, to Capt. A. M. You are fast and dirty. Return at once. Having received this message, I immediately telegraphed back that, whatever might be the explanation of the first sentence, the last sentence was correct. It immediately compelled him to reply. He accordingly packed up traps and returned to the station. On the telegram as originally dispatched ran the words "You are fast and dirty." "Thirty or forty years ago, perhaps even more than now, the queen's message was a summons of the king to the road, claiming the earliest attention from guards and porters, civility and haste to attend at every station, and to the best places in train and steamboat. In the present day, travelling always is a matter of indifference to tourists."

THE STRANGER'S CALL

some one was trailing him down. I suspected that he was being followed. I was all sorts of men in the mining camps in those days, and it was the rule to mind your own business and not to interfere with anybody else. I obeyed the rules and regulations laid down by the government of a camp he was looked upon as a member of. I was in the camp when the war was nothing even to his tentacles.

There was a big shanty in the centre of the camp, which was occupied as a store, saloon, bank and general place for the miners working there. I was in there one afternoon just before the miners knocked off. I had come by the train and was quite excited. I had noticed him. He was a slim light-skinned, fair-haired man, and though clothed in rough garb, he was a gentleman. I was a little bit of a fighter. He was sunburnt, but he was not that that was to be expected out there. He talked with the storekeeper as I entered.

Jim Davis. His face struck me plain as a big sign. I knew him. I had seen him in the newspaper enough, but there was something in his eyes that I had never seen before. He was a wild-eyed man, and a something in his eyes was a wilder yet, that he would be a pitiless enemy.

We went out before I did. Where he looked next time the next hour I never learned. The boys had been waiting for me and had eaten supper, and about twenty of us had lugged into the store for a smoke and a drink. I was sitting at the bar when I saw him. This, mind you, was suddenly shocked after Big Jim's coming. Jim sat on a bench outside the door, which was open. I happened to be looking out the door at the time, and I saw his face grow pale and his jaw tremble. He looked over to the door and there stood the other two. He had a fearful sort of smile on his face, and was looking at the two men.

In ten seconds all conversation had ceased. We instinctively felt that the two were

It was fully two minutes before the stranger moved or spoke. Then he stepped forward to Big Jim and said: "It has been over two years, but I run you down at last!"

Davis looked at him as one who sees a ghost.

"You have skunked and dodged like a coward," continued the little man in the same quiet voice, "but let me be a man now and tell you the truth. I see fair play. Shall it be pistol or knife?"

If Big Jim's eyes hadn't been wide open we might have thought him a dead man. But he was not. He was only wondering on a human face.

"It is a little affair of our own creation," explained the stranger, as he turned to us. "I have been looking for Big Jim. Jim is the man who down, to kill or be killed. This world isn't big enough for both of us. Arrange the details of your death." The stranger looked at him.

Not one of us had spoken. Just as the stranger finished Big Jim recovered from his stupor and made a move for his pistol. Like lightning the lighting the man had him covered, then he laughed a harsh, dry, derisive laugh and said:

"I ought to shoot you down like a dog, but I will give you one more chance out doors. Shall I let you go or the knife?"

Big Jim turned white again and relaxed into his former state of dumbness. The stranger surveyed him in disgust and contempt and by and by he turned to us and said:

"Back in the States this white-liver cowardly betrayed my confidence and wrecked my life. He has no right to live. His body would disgrace your diggings. Come."

Jim?"

He stepped forward and beckoned to Davis, who slowly followed, staring like one who walks in his sleep. The little man backed to the door—out of it into the moonlight, and then started up the trail and disappeared, leaving a dog track leading to the right or to the left—making not the slightest move to draw his weapon. It was as if he had been mesmerized. He was as if he had been mesmerized.

There was upon the rest of the two who stood at the door, speechless and amazed, and looked after the pair until they were out of sight. It was like looking at two dead men whose eyes were heavy with sleep.

Up the hill—around the great black rock—past the tree on which we hung Taylor of murder, and the stranger we never saw again.

A month later a prospector found David Jim's skeleton in a ravine two miles away.

Origin of the Teetotal Movement.
John King, a resident at Preston, in Lancashire, was the first man to sign the total abstinence pledge. He was a Quaker, and a member of the monogamous, which was in early line with the temperance movement. He was rather fond of a glass, having, moreover, one of those temperaments which, while capable of the most heroic self-denial, are also capable of moderation. The early temperance societies allowed the use of wines and ales. James Tearle, even then a practical teetotaler, was one of the first to insist that the pledge must be made. Joseph Livsey had become quite similarly impressed, and on Thursday, April 23, 1832, as John King was preparing to leave for London, he called on Joseph and invited him in. Their talk was of temperance, and after discussing the question Mr. Livsey asked King what he thought of the pledge. They were both agreed upon the point. A pledge was accordingly drawn up, and King signed here, Turner signed there. The two signatures sprang the total abstinence movement as now understood in this country. A few days after the incident, Turner was in the cockpit of a tub when Richard Turner, a plasterer's labourer, speaking against what he called "the abstinence pledge," said: "I will have nothing to do with any moderation—bilateralism, pledge—I'll be rec'd down tee-tee-toe too, for ever and ever." "Well done, Dick," said the name of our pledge, "that's the name of our pledge," and the name it became and still is. Turner died in 1846, and in St. Peter's churchyard, in the north-west corner, is recorded this to his memory, may be read the following inscription: "Beneath these stones are deposited the remains of Richard Turner, who died on the 12th of May 1846, aged 35 years. He was a devoted adherent of the cause of total abstinence from all intoxicating

The Perils of Welsh Mountaineering.

An exciting adventure is reported by a party of tourists from Liverpool and Manchester, who, under the leadership of a guide named Jones, started by Barmouth to ascend the mountain, which was already heavily capped with snow. The party, however, was not very fortunate, for they were caught in a storm of wind, hail, and snow. They were in the midst of Cader Idris, a precipitous and dangerous mountain, and were in a perilous position. After groping about awhile they found shelter beneath a huge boulder. The drifts of snow were so deep that the party became completely snowbound, and when the storm ceased they had to cut their way out. They then started on their way, but were again caught by the mountain, but again lost their way in the snowdrift, and found two other Englishmen who had been similarly snowed out. They then followed the tracks of these men, and through the guidance of some shepherds found their way to Barmouth in the evening, after a most exciting day's experience.

This image shows a blank, aged, light brown page, likely an endpaper or flyleaf of a book. The paper has a textured, slightly mottled appearance with some creases and discoloration, characteristic of old paper. The left edge of the page shows the binding structure, including stitching or stitching holes. There is no text or other markings on the page.

hostility towards the invaders. His men found their way into St. David, and then to the mouth of the river, where they were met by the enemy's pickets, and picking up stragglers, they proceeded to the fort. His apprehensions were, however, unfounded. The Indians had no pretensions on the part of his Indians who were known in the American service, and the raid from Detroit upon the fort, which was ruthlessly destroyed, compelled him to detach a detachment of militia and some regulars to the relief of the beleaguered fort. On the 24th, leaving about 300 men in possession of the abandoned ruins of the fort, he proceeded to the Queenston Heights. Brown advanced his three battalions of embodied militia, and both of Indian, formed the right wing of the army, consisting of the 1st, 2nd and 3rd battalions of the 4th Militia, the 1st Militia of the flank and four battalions composed of the 1st, 2nd and 3rd battalions of the 1st Militia, with three 6-pounders and a howitzer were held in reserve under Lieut.-Colonel Campbell. The 1st Militia was armed with paper, but the Royals, 8th, and 100th were more skilful battalions. The latter could not be considered as a formidable force, but they were more numerous, and with 250 effective men, while the others were very little stronger. The militia regiments were weak in numbers, and miserably armed and equipped.

"Now, this is a nice time to come home," said the man, glancing over his brows like unto a storm.

"I'm sorry," he said, humbly and sheepishly.

"I haven't said anything before," she continued, "but I'm going to put my foot down."

"You'll have to put it down pretty hard, then," he said, "for it is a mighty small foot."

She put off scolding him till a future time.

COUNTY COUNCIL.

JUNE SESSION.

FIRST DAY.

Council met at Belleville on Tuesday, 14th June.

After address by the Warden commencing the session, the Council proceeded to the consideration of the report of the Warden.

From Mr. C. Hudson of Belleville, claiming damages to the extent of $5,000 for the loss of the right hand, caused by an accident which occurred to him on the highway in the township of Sidney, between the 2nd and 3rd concessions.

Referred to the Ways and Means committee.

A petition was presented signed by ratepayers of the township of Rawdon, Madison and Hastings asking for aid to assist in making roads to road known as the Spry Settlement road.

The petition was referred to the Ways and Means committee.

Council next went into committee of the whole on Ways and Means, Mr. Farley in the chair.

The petition of ratepayers of Rawdon, Madison and Hastings, asking a grant for aid to assist in making roads to road known as the Spry Settlement road, was considered.

The Warden moved that $100 be granted to assist in making the road.

The motion of the Warden was declared out of order, as the January session of the Council was not yet closed.

A motion was made for a grant for aid to assist in making roads to road known as the Spry Settlement road.

The claim of Mr. Hudson for damages was considered.

Mr. Hagarty thought that the County was not liable in the matter.

Mr. Farley was of opinion that the matter should be laid over until Mr. Hudson or his solicitor were heard about it.

On motion the matter was laid over for the present to allow Mr. Hudson or his solicitor to appear before the committee and state his claim.

The demand of the Board of Education of the town of Rawdon for $200.00 was laid over for consideration.

An account of Dr. Eakin's for $15 for examination of lunatic was laid over.

A number of accounts were presented and asked leave to sit again.

Council adjourned until 10 o'clock Wednesday morning.

SECOND DAY.

County Council resumed at 10 a. m.

A petition was read from George Brooks claiming $200 damages to his horse and harness on account of a defective sidewalk on Russell street in the village of Rawdon on December 21st, 1891.

Referred to Ways and Means committee.

Several ratepayers asked for a special grant for the gravel road between the village of Rawdon and Bogart.

Mr. Farley moved that the matter be referred to the committee for consideration.

Mr. Hagarty thought that the County was not liable in the matter.

Improved Methods in Farming.

The depression in the price of agricultural products.

The depression in the price of agricultural products is a subject which has been discussed in various ways, but one of the most important of these was the question of wheat raising as the main branch of the farming industry after the completion of the prime farms in the Province made it no longer profitable.

But an industrial revolution has been going on among the farmers of Ontario. Gradually they have been drawing away from wheat and devoting increased attention to stock and dairying. The reports of the Bureau of Industries indicate the extent of this movement.

These reports show that in five years the acreage devoted to wheat was reduced by 253,000 acres, while during the same period the acreage of roots increased 10,000, of hay 104,000, of peas 135,000, and of clover 539,000.

The decrease in the acre of wheat apart for wheat and increase in that allowed for coarses, roots and hay is a clear indication that farmers have been more interested in stock and dairying.

This fact made still clearer by the statement showing that in four years the number of horses in the Province increased by 17,000, and that in eight years the output of cheese for the Province increased by 1,500,000.

That farmers have profited by these changes is shown by the statements contained in the report of the Bureau of Industries.

From the figures contained in the report of the Bureau of Industries it is clear that the farmers of Ontario have been more intelligent in their methods than formerly, and from what Mr. Hagarty has said, it is evident that they are gradually becoming more and more so.

They are, therefore, justified in hoping that the improvement observable in general business during the past year will be continued, and, since one of the main causes of depression has been removed.—Toronto News.
